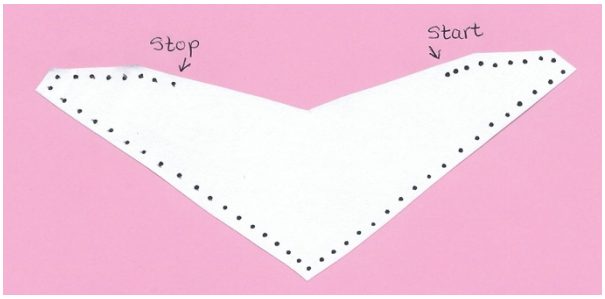
Bandana Bib

Materials:

- two pieces of fabric (size 20″ x 11″). Fabrics can be terry cloth, muslin, flannel or jersey knit cotton
- pins
- snap fasteners (Velcro or buttons work too)
- thread
- sewing machine
- bandana bib pattern printed on letter-size paper and cut out

Instructions:

- Align the pattern edge that says FOLD along the folded edge of the fabric.
- Repeat with your second fabric.
- You should now have two bib pieces the same size and shape.
- Next, pin the bib pieces with the right sides together. Starting along one of the bottom edges, use a 1/4″ seam allowance to sew almost all the way around the bib. Stop about 1.5″ from where you started, leaving a gap for turning.
- Turn the bib right side out. Tuck in the edges of the gap you left for turning, and use a hot iron to press the seams crisp.
- Now you will use an 1/8″ seam allowance to top stitch a majority of the bib. You can go all the way around, but I prefer to leave the top edge a little softer because that's where it will touch baby's face. Begining at start and tie off at stop.



- The final step is to add some sort of fastener to the ends. I chose to use plastic snaps (Kamsnaps is one brand), but Velcro or a real button and buttonhole are great options too
- Attach your fasteners to the opposite sides of the fabric, so that the ends overlap.
